MEMORIAL DAY THOUGHTS

By William J. Wells, Department Inspector, Pennsylvania Department, G. A. R.

"That the beautiful and patriotic custom of paying tribute to the fallen heroes of our country is purely an American idea is a common error, for so did the peoples of ancient nations. They did not wait even to honor their military heroes till after they became a revered memory, but on their return from war in which they had sustained the honor of the nation, they were met by the outpourings of the people, who in grateful recognition of their services, strewed their pathway with flowers. With us the strewing of spring's bright emblems of nature's most beautiful creation upon the last resting place of the soldier, his weary marches, his trials and tribulations over, began in the Southland, where the patriotic women gratefully remembering him who fought so heroically for a cause—mistaken shall we say?—but still very dear to them, essayed to express their admiration of the men who had offered up their all—their lives—for the 'Lost Cause,' by strewing them over with beautiful flowers!

"Not to be behind in this patriotic duty, when General John A. Logan, who was the Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic at that time, saw the honor paid to the memory of those who had fought so nobly to destroy this Union, bequeathed to us by our fathers, resolved, that he who had fought most heroically for its preservation should not be less honored. To carry out his noble purpose, he issued a General Order, designating the 30th day of May in each and every recurring year as the time in which the loyal people of the nation, saved by the sacrifices of its noblest sons, should express their appreciation of the services of 'The Boys in Blue,' as a counter to the honors paid to the 'Boys in Gray.' A somewhat antagonistic spirit, at first, and, for many years, followed these two acts of the South and the North, and, by many, it was considered sacrilege to lay a flower upon the grave of a 'Yankee,' or a 'Rebel,' but, as time and a better feeling grew apace, and the aspirities of 'The War' grew less, those designations, slowly, but surely, faded into the dim past, and, to-day, very little, if any, distinction is made between 'The Boys' and all are blended into 'The Blue'

THE LATE MAJOR ARCHIBALD W. BUTT, U. S. A.,
One of the Hero-Victims of the Titanic Disaster.

A Soldier's Death! Perchance it may be said
That he who swears to serve his native land
Most fittingly should die 'mid battle's mighty roar.
O, say not so! To save is nobler than to slay.
You lived as soldier should; and so you died:
Strong, gentle; firm, yet kind. Without reproach
You lived, and without fear you perished:
A good knight, tried and true, belov'd by all.
In Peace and War you served most faithfully:
And 'twas in War you died, leading a hope forlorn
Against the Powers of Nature. A Soldier's Death!

This tribute to the President's military aide, one of the hero victims of the Titanic disaster, is reproduced from "Arms and the Man." The writer, Edward P. Dechert, of Philadelphia, is a nephew of the late General Robert P. Dechert, First Brigade, N. G P., and a cousin of Colonel John Biddle Porter, U. S. A.

and 'The Gray,' and a grateful nation on 'Memorial—Memory—Day' seek only to honor all as the nation's dead, the bitterness and the hatred having passed away, to be succeeded by peace and love.

"Shall this beautiful custom pass away with the interment of the last soldier, and become only a memory? May God forbid! When the soldier is no longer appreciated, but forgotten, it is a question whether or not the nation—or any nation—is worth fighting for and preserved.

"If the custom is to be preserved, who, better than that the citizen soldier, he upon whom the nation must depend for its salvation in times of peril, to perpetuate it, supplemented by the patriotic youth of the land? Therein lies the obligation. Will they assume it as a sacred duty? We believe they will.

"The following beautiful 'Tribute to Our Honored Dead,' by Henry Ward Beecher, who loved the nation's defenders probably more than any other public man, is apropos here.

"How bright are the honors that await those who with sacred fortitude and heroic patience have endured all things that they might save their native land from division and from the power of corruption! The honored dead! They that die for a good cause are redeemed from death. Their names are gathered and garnered. Their memory is precious. Oh, tell me not that they are dead! That generous host, that army of invisible heroes. They hover as a cloud of witnesses above this nation. Are they dead that yet speak louder than we can speak and a more universal language? Are they dead that yet move upon society and inspire the people with nobler motives and more heroic patriotism? Till the mountains are worn out and the rivers forget to flow, till the clouds are weary of replenishing the springs and the springs forget to gush, and the rills to sing, shall their names be kept fresh with reverent honors which are inscribed upon the book of National Remembrance."

Memorial Day, to the officers and men of the Fourteenth Regiment, always recalls the loss to that command of Colonel Peter D. Perchment. Though dead for practically a score of years, his memory is still green and will continue so in the future. Colonel Perchment endeared himself to his regiment, and demonstrated by his executive conduct and high sense of personal integrity all that was best in a regimental commander.

COLONEL PETER D. PERCHMENT.

The late Colonel Peter D. Perchment, of the Fourteenth Regiment Infantry, was one of Pittsburgh's most distinguished citizens, and was for years one of the chief men of affairs in Western Pennsylvania. Colonel Perchment entered the service as Captain of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Infantry, on July 1, 1870. He was re-elected July 9, 1875, and August 6, 1880. He was chosen Lieutenant Colonel on December 2, 1884, and elected Colonel on March 24, 1888. He was re-elected to the command of the regiment on March 24, 1893. Colonel Perchment died on August 15, 1894. At the time of his death the following general orders were issued:

Headquarters National Guard of Pennsylvania.

Adjutant General's Office,

Harrisburg, August 15, 1894.

General Orders, No. 16.

It is with regret that it is announced to the Guard the decease this day at 2.19 P. M. of Colonel Peter D. Perchment, of the Fourteenth Regiment. He was, during the war, Assistant Surgeon of the Seventh Missouri Cavalry. He entered the Guard as Captain of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment, July 1, 1870; was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel of same regiment December 2, 1884, and Colonel, March 24, 1888. Eminent in his profession, an enthusiastic and proficient guardsman. Out of respect for his memory the colors of his regiment will be draped for thirty days.

By order of ROBERT E. PATTISON,

Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

W. W. GREENLAND,

Adjutant General.

Official:

Colonel Perchment served with particular distinction at Johnstown, following the disaster of May 31, 1889. He was one of the first officers of the National Guard to appear with his regiment at the scene of the flood, and he at once took a leading part in the efforts to aid the sufferers and likewise to insure order in the stricken community. Colonel Perchment was a physician of high attainments. He graduated from Jefferson Medical College on March 10, 1865, and for twenty-eight years was most successful in his chosen profession.

Editor The Journal

Dear Sir:—"For years you have been publishing a high class journal without getting the support you deserve. Every officer finds monthly your roster always up-to-date and always in advance of the G. O. from the A. G. O., and if their news is anything lacking in the style and quantity of the Journal and if the contents lack, it is simply because the Guardsmen, whose interests you strive to serve, interest themselves not enough to keep you informed of what is going on in their respective commands.

"The 'big talk' just now is whether the Guard will be required for intervention in Mexico. The chances are that it will not, and for several reasons, the chief one being because there is no warrant of law for calling them.

"It is now an open secret what has been known to the thoughtful for a long time, that the organized militia cannot be called on until a nenabling act of Congress is enacted, and that the law sharps of the regular establishment are opposed to the employment of the militia, except as volunteers or on some plan that would give the command at least of the higher units to the regular officers.

"It is understood that an agreement has been reached by which Congress shall enact a measure that will authorize the President, in emergency, to call into service entire organizations in command of their State appointed commanders.

"But when the test comes, without doubt, the Secretary of War and the Regular Army junta around Washington will undoubtedly be found just where they were on the 'pay bill.'

"In regard to that matter they 'put one over' on the militia, and when they obtained, with the aid of the militia, what they wanted out of Congress, they made the passage of the pay bill impossible.

"And so under the proposed amendment to the Dick Act, there will be nothing to prevent the President calling for thirty or forty single companies, not in battalions nor regiments, nor brigades, but here and there, and putting them in battalions, regiments and brigades to which the President will appoint all the officers except the company officers.

"General Stewart is 'on' all right and he has made a splendid fight for the N. G. P., of which little is generally known and but scant credit given him, but he is up against the deliberate design of the regular establishment to 'officer' the organized militia if it ever goes into service.

"Of course some of us militia officers would not be worth the powder to blow us up, in real service, but there are many of the army chaps who are 'tarred with the same stick' and many a bright young army officer filled to the throat-latch with the love of modern schools, who is able in theory to criticize and improve the campaigns of Marlboro, Napoleon and Lee, but would find himself up to the neck in trouble in putting a brigade of the N. G. P. into its customary summer camp.

"What about the 'pay bill?'

"Handsome armories do not get the men out to drill. The unusual complaint amongst the captains is the difficulty in securing men to enlist, at least this is true in the western end of the State. Take the Sixteenth and Eighteenth Regiments. No regiments in the Guard are better officered than are these two regiments. The Eighteenth has a splendid armory, beautifully equipped, offering practically all the advantages of a modern club. The Sixteenth has three State company armories. But the diffiuclty is to get men to enlist. We might as well look the facts in the face, the high cost of living, the comparatively low scale of wages, and the stress of modern life, demands the utmost efforts of young men to get on in their private affairs.

"The spirit of patriotism, apparently as dead as Julius Caesar, will spring into life with the first tocsin of war, but meanwhile the work of preparation languishes and will not quicken until the men are paid for drill. A few kid glove organization may blather a bit about mercenary service, but the fact remains that the hard-working, ambitious young men, who will make the dependable soldiers when the need comes, cannot afford the time nor expense of attendance on drill, without compensation, and if you will pass the pay bill you will find the kid-glovers' armory the first at the paymaster's office.

"The hard practical fact is that if the public need or require a body of men to be prepared for war, it ought to pay the bill. The fellows who harp about the degeneracy of the service that will come from the payment of the troops make me tired. I never heard that it degenerated the service any that clergymen were paid. General Stewart's admirable services could not be more desirable or efficient if he worked for nothing. He is paid a substantial salary and heis worth it and gives his whole time to it, and for the very same reason every officer and man in the Guard giving of his time should be compensated by all it is worth to the public. If the public does not think it worth a price that will enable men "to afford to belong to the Guard," then the whole organization should be disbanded.

"GUARDSMAN."

EXTRACTS FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

That Might Prove Interesting to Some of Our Young and Ambitious Guardsmen Who Are Contemplating Application for Admission to West Point.

Headquarters United States Military Academy,
West Point, N. Y., September 1, 1911.

Sir: As directed by the President in paragraph 6, Special Orders, No. 65, War Department, March 19, 1910, the undersigned assumed the duties of superintendent of the United States Military Academy and command of the post of West Point, N. Y., on August 31, 1910, relieving therefrom Major Hugh L. Scott, 14th Cavalry.

Within a month after assuming command, on Saturday, September 24, 1910, the Corps of Cadets, while at supper in the mess hall, took part in a concerted, disrespectful, and insubordinate demonstration, ordinarily known as "silence," which was intended to convey to the officer in charge their disapproval of certain of his official acts. There was a premeditated continuance of this quasi mutinous act on the following Sunday morning at breakfast.

The officer concerned acted promptly and properly at the time and took such means as were within his power to stamp out this senseless and entirely uncalled for demonstration.

A thorough investigation proved that there was absolutely no foundation in fact for the alleged grievances which some members of the Corps of Cadets believed to have existed. It further developed that responsibility rested entirely with the first class—the class of 1911—all of the cadet officers of which class failed in their duty, and instead of using their offices to prevent such a childish and senseless demonstration, really aided and abetted therein.

After careful consideration of the findings of the investigating board suitable punishments were awarded.

The officer against whom the demonstration was made is unusually able and has fully demonstrated his efficiency since. He did his duty as was specifically prescribed in the regulations and orders governing the academy, and exception was taken to his proper methods of performing duty by reason of laxity that had existed in carrying out orders and regulations.

It would seem that some such action by the Corps of Cadets had been brewing for some time and was anticipated by the authorities during the last summer encampment, when four army officers were detailed for duty in the camp, in addition to the commandant of cadets and eight tactical officers, with instructions to remain awake from midnight until reveille daily to preserve order while the officers of the tactical department slept.

Such action would seem to indicate lack of confidence in the corps and especially in the cadet officers.

Excepting the above demonstration, the discipline of the Corps of Cadets has been satisfactory.

The usual program of theoretical and practical instruction was carried out during the year.

Since the present commandant of cadets, Lieutenant Colonel Fred. W. Sladen, Eleventh Infantry, assumed his duties marked improvement has been apparent in the tone of the corps, its discipline and instruction.

It is believed that the best results can only obtain when the commandant of cadets is an efficient infantry officer. This, without any reflection whatever on officers of other arms, and without corps or arm prejudice. It stands to reason that an officer who has for many years devoted his whole time and attention to Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Coast Artillery duties and instruction is not proficient in the fine points of infantry drill and instruction and is inclined for that reason to pass said instruction down to one of his subordinates who is an infantry officer.

The Battalion of Cadets is an infantry organization; there are competent instructors for Cavalry and Field Artillery, and the senior infantry instructor should be the commandant of cadets, who should have direct charge of infantry instruction, especially of the battalion.

The following is an extract from the report of the commandant of cadets:

Headquarters United States Corps of Cadets,
Camp Wesley Merritt,
West Point, N. Y., June 20, 1911.

Sir: * * * Special attention was given to field training in all arms of the service. During the summer camp the first-class, organized as Cavalry and Artillery, were sent out on practice marches on the reservation, camping over night. On these marches, the cadets were required to perform all the duties of enlisted men, none of the latter being taken along. Every Saturday was devoted to infantry field instruction, covering the use of advance and rear guards, establishing of outposts, making reconnaissance and attack and defense of positions, with small forces. A six-day practice march by the entire corps was made at the end of camp.

CAPTAIN EDMUND DUNN,
Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

This is the first year that instruction has been given under the new firing manual. The changes and more difficult course of rifle practice in the new firing manual makes comparison of the record of the class of 1911 with that of former classes impossible. Greatest interest was manifested by every member of the class. Two cadets qualified as expert riflemen, 32 as sharpshooters, 22 as marksmen, and 28 not qualified.

The third class fired special course A.

It is strongly recommended that steps be taken to construct and equip gallery ranges in the basement of the gymnasium. With these ranges, much of the time during release from quarters in the winter could be devoted to instruction in rifle and pistol practice.

Plans and estimates for these galleries have been submitted.

Practical instruction in Coast Artillery has covered for the first-class instruction in fire control and service of the piece for the 6-inch rifle and 12-inch mortar. For the third class, instruction and drill with the 6-inch rifle and 12-inch mortar.

The results obtained during the five days devoted to Coast Artillery drills and target practice, August 15 to 20, at Fort Hancock, N. J., were very satisfactory. Cadets have no drills with the 10-inch rifle before going to Fort Hancock. In the case of the 6-inch rifle and 12-inch mortar, the manning details used for these guns at Fort Hancock, N. J., did not have an opportunity of having more than two or three drills together before going to that post for practice, on account of other drills and duties.

The method of instruction of the cadets in riding during the past year has not been changed. The work has progressed satisfactorily. Great benefit has been received from the use of that part of the new riding hall which has been completed. Special attention has been given in equitation to the seat and the use of the "aids." A number of new horses was received during the past year from the Remount Station at Fort Reno, and they have proved highly satisfactory.

The new gymnasium was completed during the year. On account of increased facilities, instruction in gymnastic exercises, fencing, boxing, swimming, and wrestling, has been more complete than usual. Cadets of all four classes have had instruction. This work, under Captain Koehler and his assistants, has been most satisfactory.

The class of 252 new cadets, admitted on June 14, has, under the command of Captain R. E. Longan, Infantry, made remarkable progress in the preliminary drills and duties of a cadet and will be taken up for duty with the battalion on the 4th of July.

Academic Departments.

The academic period as approved by the act of Congress of March 2, 1907, was four years and three months, the new cadets reporting annually on March 1.

This brought the new cadets here at a very unseasonable time of the year, and there was additional objection in that they began their academic work while being whipped into shape militarily.

Nearly one hundred years' experience had led to the abandonment of the admission of cadets in September. After very serious consideration the academic board unanimously recommended return to the four years' course. With few changes the curriculum for the four years and three months could be practically covered in four years. This recommendation was approved by the War Department, and new cadets will hereafter enter about June 15, yearly. This is as it should be and enables the new cadets to receive proper military instruction and become environed during the summer encampment, a period of two and one-half months, before beginning academic work on September 1.

Great credit is due the heads of the academic departments and their assistants for the unusual record made this year in academic instruction.

A conscientious effort is made by these officers to teach and to carry along every cadet who does his best and is of good character and physique. In each department an instructor is available during cadet recreation hours, daily, except Saturdays and Sundays, to give instruction or assistance to any cadet who desires it in the subject in hand.

As a result of this conscientious endeavor no cadet was discharged for deficiency in the December, 1910, examination; four members of the fourth class then deficient in mathematics were turned back to the incoming class. No such record has been made in respect of cadets discharge for deficiency since the Civil War.

In the June, 1911, examination the entire first, second, and third classes were proficient in all subjects; the former graduated and the other two classes were advanced.

On completion of the said courses in March, 1911, one cadet of the second class was discharged for deficiency in ordnance and gunnery and three cadets of the third class were deficient in mathematics, two being turned back and one continued with his class to make up the deficiency in June.

In the fourth class only four cadets were deficient and discharged, three of whom had been formerly declared deficient and were either turned back or reappointed. The fourth cadet has been reappointed.

Five cadets were therefore discharged for deficiency in studies during the academic year as against 48 so discharged last year, 21 of whom, however, were cadets of the fourth class discharged as a result of their first, the June, examination.

This unusual condition could not obtain but for the conscientious, devoted, and unusual efforts of all in the academic departments to whom belong the credit for this commendable achievement.

The work of all academic departments has been unusually satisfactory, which is emphasized by the care taken in the instruction of cadets resulting in a very low percentage of deficiencies, mostly in the lowest class.

Department of Mathematics.

The course in mathematics was carried on with satisfactory results and with but few deficiencies. The following is an extract from the report of the professor of mathematics:

The prescribed course in mathematics for the fourth class for the year required daily recitations between September 1 and June 3. Algebra, begun the previous March, was concluded; plane and spherical trigonometry, plane and solid analytical geometry, and descriptive geometry exclusive of linear perspective were completed. The only variation from the previous year's work was the postponement of the course in linear perspective to next year. The 10 lessons usually spent on that subject were devoted by the lower third of the class to an additional review of analytical and descriptive geometry. The upper two-thirds were given extra work in the transformation of co-ordinates and practice in the solution of loci problems and curve tracing.

Fine and Thompson's Co-ordinate Geometry was adopted, with the approval of the War Department, as a textbook in analytical geometry, and portions of it were used with the upper sections of the fourth class to replace corresponding parts in the text of Smith and Gale.

Examinations were held in December and June. Five cadets were pronounced deficient in December in a class of 132, four of these were suspended to join the next class and one (a foreigner) was continued without standing.

Nine cadets were pronounced deficient in June in a class of 127. Six of these were turned back to the next class, two were discharged and one (a foreigner) was recommended for withdrawal.

The prescribed course in mathematics for the third class required recitations daily from September 1 to October 31, and on alternate days from November 1 to February 28. Within this period differential and integral calculus and least squares were completed. No variations from the previous year's work were made nor were there any changes of text for this class.

Examinations were held in December and March. Three cadets were pronounced deficient in March in a class of 100. Two were turned back to the next class. One was conditioned and passed a re-examination in June.

In addition to their regular work, the instructors of the department have attended conferences in the afternoons conducted by the professor and associate professor, in which they have been schooled in the methods of instruction and in the subject matter of the various text books.

Department of English and History.

Under the act of Congress approved April 19, 1910, Lucius H Holt was appointed professor of English and history. He entered upon his duties on July 2, 1910, and has conducted the work of his department with marked efficiency. He reports as follows:

The present professor of English and history took over the department from Acting Professor J. C. Adams on July 2, 1910. At the beginning of academic work in September eight instructors were serving in the department, four in English and four in history. These instructors were for the most part detailed from the department of modern languages.

The work of the department was wholly with the fourth class For the purposes of instruction the class was divided into 16 sections, reciting daily, 8 in English and 8 in history, those reciting in English one day having history next, and vice versa. One hundred and thirty-two cadets were in the fourth class in September. Arrangements of sections were made to put 12 cadets in each of the upper sections, so as to allow the lower sections to be made up of not more than 6 or 7 cadets. By this means those cadets who were most in need dof assistance were able to get more individual attention from the instructors.

In English at the time the instruction of the cadets began in September the fourth class was supposed to have been thoroughly drilled in the elements of rhetoric and to have gained some knowledge of the Elizabethan period of English literature during the term lasting from March to June; in history the class had studied the period from the beginning of the sixteenth century up through the battle of Waterloo. The work both in English and in history for the term from September through January, 1911, had already been planned by Professor Adams. No radical change from the established and accepted plan of work was made by the persent professor. In two ways, however, an attempt was made to make the instruction more effective: First, by a requirement that each cadet take careful notes of new matter and new interpretations brought out in the class; second, by the preparation for the use of the instructors of detailed outlines for each recitation.

First, the notes. Each cadet was required to bring his notebook to each recitation and to take notes during each recitation His notebook was examined and marked twice or three times each term. Full explanations were given to the cadets of the way the notebooks should be kept, and of the use which should be made of them. To facilitate the taking of accurate notes and also to permit the cadet at any point in a recitation to grasp the precise bearing of the question asked, the simple device was adopted of putting on the board at each recitation a concise diagram of the material to be covered during the hour. It has been the experience of the department that the cadets, especially those of the lower sections, have been able by taking notes and by following attentively the simple diagram mentioned to derive much more benefit from the course than formerly.

Second, the lesson outlines. These detailed outlines were intended for the use of the instructors in their preparation of the day's lesson for teaching. The chief advantage gained from them has been uniformity in class room presentation. Before each recitation the head of the department in conference with the instructors went over the material in the lesson assigned with the outline, showing what emphasis might properly be placed, how the important points might most effectively be presented, and answering questions. Necessarily allowing for the individual factor in teaching, it has been the experience of the department that the proper use of these detailed outlines has made the teaching more uniform and enabled the instructors to be prepared better for the recitations.

The method of the recitation was not changed. The first part of the recitation hour in English has commonly been devoted to a 15-minute written paper on a topic selected from the day's lesson, emphasis being laid on the necessity of correct expression. Occasionally longer themes have been required, but it is the belief of the head of the department that the best ends of the English course in this academy are obtained by emphasis upon clear, correct, and concise expression of facts, information, or the like, rather than upon long-sustained essays or attempts at essays in literature. In history the recitations in the political science part of the course were not as successful as could be desired. This was due, it is believed, to the poor text book used, and will be remedied largely by the introduction of a better text book for the purpose next year.

The regular course has been supplemented by lectures, several by the head of the department and four by outside lecturers. It is the belief of the department that both in English and in history effective lectures can do much to clarify the work for the cadets. It is hoped that during the next year provision can be made for more than four outside lecturers.

CAPTAIN J. CLAYTON ERB,

Though dead almost four years, it seems as though it was only yesterday that Captain J. Clayton Erb was with his friends of the Guard, contributing his deep interest in its welfare and enthusing all with whom he came in contact. Captain Erb was an officer of rare ability and a devoted patriot. Memorial Day will always remind his friends of the sad death of this splendid soldier.

Mention should be made of the work with the fourth class from March to June of this year. Owing to the change from a four-year-and-three-months' course to a four-year course, the fourth class, one-half the class daily, continued its work in English from March till June. The assigned lessons were from the plays of the most important contemporary English (and American) dramatists. In the work the attempt was made to familiarize the students with these selected plays, to draw pertinent comparisons with the drama of a former period, and to inspire a proper appreciation of what is typical of the best of modern dramatic literature in English. The methods used in teaching were not different from those outlined above.

At the beginning of February the instructors detailed from the department of modern languages for work in the department of English and history were relieved from work in the latter department. Then for the first time in its history, all of the instructors in the department were officers detailed for that duty alone. Under an act of Congress of March 3, 1911, an assistant professor was created in the department. With the coming of the next large fourth class, and the consequent increase in instructors in the department, the necessity of an assistant professor in English, as well as the one already provided, who is serving in the history branch, will become evident.

Certain changes in text books have been recommended for the coming year. It is believed that in the English course the omission of Carlyle's Heroes and Hero-Worship and the substitution of new text books for the study of Tennyson and Stevenson, and the introduction of a play by Sheridan, a play by Pinero, and a history of English literature, will strengthen the course both in substitution of Prof. Gettell's Introduction of Political Science in the place of Prof. Dealey's Development of the State. The orderly arrangement of material and frequent concrete illustrations in Prof. Gettell's work should enable the cadet to gain a more intelligent knowledge of the subject than was possible from the book displaced.

Increase in the Number of Cadets and the Filling of Vacancies.

On September 1, 1910, 122 vacancies existed in the Corps of Cadets. When the War Department approved of the change to the four years' course and directed the admission of the next class in June, 1911, the January examination of candidates which had been provided for with a view to the admission of the successful ones on March 1 was held. An additional examination was held in May with a view of filling the vacancies existing after the January examination.

The results of these two examinations were in a measure disappointing, in that 52 vacancies still remained to be filled.

For the examination in January, 1911, 553 candidates were nominated to cover the 300 vacancies.

The following summary shows the result of this examination:

Appointments, including 1 Filipino	553
Failed to report	122
Failed to complete examination	11
Withdrawn	1
Declined	4
Rejected physically, qualified mentally	15
Failed mentally, qualified physically	165
Mentally and physically disqualified	42
Qualified alternates for whom no vacancies existed	23
Qualified and to be admitted, including 1 Filipino	170
Total	553

The foregoing statements show that practically the same number of vacancies remained after the third examination of candidates as after the second examination. This condition is accounted for by the fact that between the May and July examinations 11 cadets resigned and 4 were discharged for deficiency in studies, thus leaving 69 vacancies to be filled prior to the third examination. Of the candidates appointed for the July examination but 15 were admitted, thus leaving 54 vacancies to be filled. Since the July examination 3 more new cadets have resigned, leaving at date 57 vacancies.

The qualified candidates of this examination were admitted on August 1, 1911. Therefore, after three examinations there still exist 57 vacancies. In the last examination the following districts were not represented, no candidates having been designated: Second, third, and seventh, Arkansas; second, twelfth, fifteenth, and twenty-fourth, Illinois; ninth, Iowa; 3rd and 7th, Louisiana; third and fourth, Mississippi; sixth, Nebraska; nineteenth and thirty-fifth, New York; second and seventh, North Carolina; fifth, Oklahoma; seventeenth, Pennsylvania.

It is believed there are in all districts qualified young men who desire these appointments, and it is regretted that such young men are not nominated, or at least given a chance by competitive examination or otherwise.

The circular of information sent out from the academy to Congressmen, candidates, and others interested, is complete as to the mental and physical requirements, and any reputable physician could at once determine by examination whether or not the candidate is qualified physically; but notwithstanding the care taken to impart this information many candidates are rejected for physical defects. In one instance all three candidates nominated from a district were rejected physically and mentally, and there are many districts in which two of the three candidates were rejected physically.

With a view to filling all vacancies effort was made to secure the enactment of the following legislation, but unfortunately it failed:

Provided, That whenever any cadetship at the United States Military Academy is available for the appointment of a cadet from any State at large or from any congressional district or territory, the President shall appoint a cadet from the United States at large to fill such cadetships unless the proper Senator, Representative, or delegate in Congress shall nominate an eligible candidate for appointment to such cadetship within six months after having been requested by the War Department to nominate such a candidate: Provided further, That hereafter whenever all vacancies at the Military Academy shall not have been filled as a result of the regular annual entrance examination the superintendent shall fill not to exceed 30 of the remaining unfilled vacancies by admissions from the whole list of alternates, selected in their order of merit established at such entrance examination, preferably from the same State in which the vacancy occurs. The admissions thus made shall be credited to the United States at large and shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment authorized by existing law: And provided further, That whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength as now provided by law the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as the Corps of Cadets may be reduced below its present authorized strength.

The plant here is sufficient for the accommodation and instruction of a certain number of cadets, and in the interest of the country, the army, and economy the maximum number should be under instruction at all times.

If legislation such as the above cited be not enacted, and in the light that these appointments belong to the several States and congressional districts, it is suggested that examinations be held in each district at which any eligible youth may appear, the one passing the best examination to be appointed.

At the examination held in January, 1911, 37 candidates for 14 appointments at large were examined competitively. A comparison of the examinations of these 37 candidates with those of the candidates from State and congressional districts emphasized the advisability of the course pursued by the President in selecting his appointees.

The requirements for candidates in English composition and English literature are clearly stated in the circular of information as follows:

Candidates will be required:

1. By the writing of short themes on subjects chosen by themselves within limits set by the examination paper, to prove (a) their ability to spell, capitalize, and punctuate, and (b) their mastery of the elementary principles of composition, including paragraphing and sentence structure.

2. To give evidence of intelligent acquaintance with three plays of Shakespeare, one comedy, one history, and one tragedy. The Merchant of Venice, Henry V. and Macbeth being especially recommended.

3. To exhibit a fair knowledge of the names of the most prominent English and American authors, and of the names of their principal work.

The following are taken from candidates' examination papers of July 5, 1911:

Robert Burns was and English he was born in England and his parents were very poor. All during Roberts early child hood he showed that he was very bright. He is considered one of the greatest English His poems sound different from that of the other poets. The sound much more smoother

Robert Burns was an English writer of poems. Burns was born of poor parents, his father being a common day labor. Burns when young show a taste for good book. Often while eating a meal he would take his book to the table and read as he ate. Burns was large mans, but the hard labor which he did while young weaken him. When about seventeen Burns attended a dancing school which his parents objected to very much.

Burns early education was obtain thro his mother and a poor school. To which he could attend only a few months a year.

As Burns grew in man hood he feel in with companions. The results were he became a drunken.

Robert Burns came from the Pesent class of Scotland; His father took it upon himself to instruct his son as he should be. When Robert was a boy, his father would talk to him as if he were a man with intelligence and maturer knowledge instead of a mere boy. Nature greatly influenced him as is shown by his literary works later; many of his poems were about birds, and the animals he came in contact in his daily work on the farm.

Burns was of Scotch decent. His people were poor and ignorent. His oppertunities were not good but he was determine. The poetical blood seemed to have run through his veins. He knew the peasant life well and it influenced his works of later years. No poet has evern been able too surpass him in describing the peasant life.

The battle of Waterloo where Napoleon the most noted and powerful ruler also general that Europe has ever produced, is what some authoraties say as to his greatness, met his defeat his defeat was merely an oversight on his part.

The Battle of Waterloo was fought between the French and English. The French were lad by Nepolean and the English by Lord Wellingford.

Nepolean had captured most of Europe and had been carrying on a war against England. The English were the better on seas but French beat them on land.

One day in August a few of the boys thought they would go camping so they invited the rest of us to go along to do the work I should imagine, it seemed so later, but of course we hade our trobles the same as other campers do. We forgot to take salt. The first few days things went lovely but later the fellow that couldn't whip the rest hade to be cook the next weakest the dish washer and so on down untill we had a sort of feudil system each one swearing alegence to the One who last whiped him, this continued for the remainder of the time and finley got so bad that camp was broken and we went home.

As examples of failure to exhibit a fair knowledge of English literary history, the following answers to the question asked—"In a few paragraphs (altogether about 200 words) mention the chief characteristics of the most important writers of the nineteenth century in English literature"—are submitted:

The important writers of the 19th Century were nearly all raised as poor boys from poor families. The one we should class first among them is Longfellow. After his death. The people of England thought so much about him, they ask for his bust for the Poets Corner in West Minster Abbey. It stands in prominate place today.

There were a number of good writers such as Johnson, Jonson, Tennyson, and etc.

The majority of the best writers at this time were Englishmen. The Americans only being a few. That is comparing them with the Foreign writers.

There was a great difference between the writings of Englishmen and Americans. The American writings seem to have more humor and a more pleasant way in expressing themselves. Reading a book written by an Englishmen is does not have the easy smoothe effect as the Americans.

The age as a whole may be classed as the Interduction of the Novel because the majority of the work was prose and the majority of the prose were novels we have of corse poets, such as Wodsworth Shelly, Kets, Byron, But we also have, Dickens, Gorge Elliot Thackeray, Carlyle whith his essays The chartertstcs of the literature was love of nature in Burns and Wodsworth.

We have Wodsworth's definition of poetry, "a superflous overflow of the powerfull fealing" Burns says, if it hade but a spark of natures fire. In the novel we have character desceiption and well developed plots, also Humor.

Some of the most important writters of the nineteenth century are Eller Wheeler Wilcox Elbert Hubbard Jack London Walt Whitman and Dorothy Dix. Among this number two of them are women and there pieces and writings are very interesting. Elbert Hubbard is somewhat of a phylosopher. He is also a splendid writer. He wrote the Doctor and a good many other books. Jack London is more of a novelist than a writer. His chief work is writting up prise fights and other things. Walt Whitman is called the poet philosopher and his works are very interested. He writes for all of the newspapers.

As evidence of complete unfitness to take the examination in history for this academy the following answers to questions asked in the recent examination are submitted:

Q. Who was Nebuchadnezzar and for what achievements was he noted?

A. Nebuchadnezzar was a prophet and was noted for his foreseeings He told the certain things would happen and they did happen.

A. He was ancient king and was a soldier. He compled to eat grass and live in the forest for about nine years. He founded the city Ninneh.

A. Nebuchadnezzar was an Egyptian ruler, noted for founding a library. Gave Egypt a good start.

A. He started with about a million and 1-2 soldiers and followers. He entered Greece and foughted the battle of Thermopylae was victorious but cost him a great many men.

A. With a large army he defeated the Greek at Thermopelae spearing only one man. In the naval battle of Salamis he was defated. His attempts were a vailure.

MILITARY TRANSPORT

Water and Rail.

By Colonel Chauncey M. Baker, U. S. A.

The actual loading of equipage and supplies should also be supervised by an officer, to see that cars are completely loaded and that none are left.

All cars to carry freight, baggage and equipment, should be called for in ample time in advance to permit of a thorough inspection, careful and methodical loading without hurry or confusion, and to allow time for assembling fatigue details between the conclusion of the loading of the freight and baggage and the time fixed for the entraining of troops.

As a rule, it will be practicable for railroads to furnish freight and baggage equipment in advance of passenger equipment. If, however, the command is small and trackage is sufficient, it will be more convenient to set in the entire equipment at one time.

All the details of entraining, loading and unloading should be in the hands of one man, and, once the details are worked out by a staff officer and promulgated, any effort on the part of superior authority to change the progress of such work is sure to result in disarrangement and delay. In this class of work, the commanding officer, if he has left these matters to his staff officers, should give detailed orders with caution, unless he has kept himself constantly in touch with the details as they have been developed.

In this class of work, as in all others, it is better to allow a poor plan to work itself out rather than to undertake to abandon it in the midst of its accomplishment and substitute another, no matter how superior it may be, and in this class of operations such a change will be certain to disturb the free operations of the railroad and result, in disjointed and unsatisfactory service and most annoying delays.

In case a single track railroad is to be made use of, it is most important that all movements in the process of concentration be completed from one direction before they are taken up from the opposite direction; otherwise the road is almost certain to become blocked at the sidings by movements of unusual traffic in opposite directions at the same time, no matter how well provided with sidings. This is a matter that can be provided for in the orders given by the Commanding General directing the concentration of the troops. Similarly, in dispersing troops from a point of concentration, those going in the same direction should be despatched together, leaving those going in the opposite direction to be despatched together.

The regulations provide for the method of loading "impedimenta" baggage, rations and, in general, such provision is made that it will be practicable to unload them and separate them and distribute them to the proper owners without confusion. The details provided should be rigidly followed, always under the supervision of an officer of the organization to which the property pertains. Commanding officers should insist that all baggage and property and every package of whatever description, be, plainly marked and labeled.

When the army was less on the move than in recent years, it was a constant source of confusion to find the various parts that belonged to the same vehicle, and this will always be one of the difficulties that inexperienced troops will have to overcome. While these may seem small matters, yet delays, inconvenience, humiliating predicaments, discomfort, and not infrequently, absolute disaster result in just such avoidable oversights or omissions. There should be definite provisions and arrangements for the location and marking of all such articles and for bringing them together once they have been dispersed. There is no detail too insignificant for the attention of the officer whose duty it is to accomplish such movements. Nuts, bolts, linch-pins, wrenches may seem small matters, yet they are essential parts of the wagon and their proper disposition should be indicated and provided for. This should not only be known to the teamster, but should be known to those in authority so that the chances of going wrong may be minimized. Harness, halter-straps, and all the appurtenances of the transportation should be disposed of in the same way, and all in a uniform manner throughout the command.

Transportation of Troops.

In calling for equipment, both the number of troops and the class of equipment desired must be stated. The class of equipment will depend, of course, on the length of the journey. The manner of moving the freight, transportation of the animals, character of the cars to be provided, details of rigging such cars, provision for attendants, etc., are shown in the regulations and manuals.

One of the most desirable features of rail transportation in connection with the movements of troops is the Hospital Train. This train should be thoroughly equipped and no single service can result in greater relief to an active army than the withdrawing of those from the field and divison hospitals whom the medical officers in charge pronounce convalescent and suitable subjects for sick leaves or recuperation at their homes or some central hospital more or less remote from the front. These trains should be solid Pullman trains, equipped with the necessary corps of medical officers, nurses and all provisions for caring for sick and wounded. The advantage of the sick under such conditions is no greater than that to those who are left behind.

Entraining.

The entraining officer detailed by the commanding officer of troops should study his problem, understand the manner in which space is assigned, study all approaches so as to avoid confusion; he should get the troops to the point of embarkation not too early; provide for the establishment of the necessary guards, and be prepared to indicate the car or cars troops are to occupy.

The cars of each train should be marked at the step in chalk. Written memoranda should be furnished organizations, showing the destination of the train, kinds of cars, and so on.

One important feature in the movement of troops is the economical care of water. It is not a simple matter to re-water a train, and unless proper economy is used from the beginning, great inconvenience and suffering may result; unless the journey is a short one provision should be made for an extra supply.

Facilities for entraining should be provided by the staff officers in charge of the work, or improvised, if need be, by the troops.

On board train proper discipline should be maintained. Suitable police, commissary arrangements, inspections and guard should all be provided for.

In the matter of detraining, suitable attention should be given to side-tracks, spurs, switches, platforms, ramps and other facilities for detraining. The location of the temporary yards and storehouses in relation to camp site, should be carefully considered both with reference to freight and passengers.

The detraining should be in the hands of the same officer of the troops who had charge of the entraining, and the labor of unloading the baggage and equipage should, if possible, be performed by the same details as did the loading. The officer of the troops in charge of their detraining should have definite instruction as to time and place of reporting to the staff officer under whose direction the de-training is to be effected. The assignment of non-commissioned officers, the formation of troops, the location of guard if necessary, the prompt movement of troops upon leaving trains, and provisions for withdrawing empty equipage should all have attention in advance so that it may not be necessary to ask questions. Necessary details of enlisted men should be provided for, assembled, and instructed in their duties well in advance of the time that they will be required for service.

All minor details of information should be obtained in advance, if possible, of necessity for action. It should not be necessary to censure valuable time in gathering information regarding the details of detraining when such could just as well have been learned in advance.

Entraining and Despatch of Large Bodies.

In working out the details providing for dispersal of large bodies of troops, the utmost care should be taken. Mistake in a very minor matter in a movement of this character may throw the whole movement into disorder. The full make-up of trains, together with the units that are to be carried upon trains, should be scheduled and tabulated and each separate person or detachment of troops interested should have full advise. Necessary instructions should be given quartermaster accompanying troops by rail, and commanding officers, to provide against any contingency. The addresses of the proper railway officials to be communicated with under varying circumstances should be furnished the commanding officer and quartermaster. If these are not available, the division superintendent can usually be promptly reached through the headquarters of the road.

The troops making up a consolidated train and the operating department of the railroad are all deeply interested in every detail of this movement, and whatever instructions are given should be conveyed to all interested officials and the commanding officers.

Construction and Repair of Roads.

Without doubt, in active operations, if the government undertakes to operate lines of railroad, it will be necessary to maintain forces, not only for repair of roads, but also for construction of additional lines, spurs, side-tracks, etc. When such labor becomes necessary, it will be necessary or organize, practically from new personnel, the means for such construction and repairs, as was done under the direction of Colonel McCallum with the army of the Potomac during the period of the Civil War, and under General Parsons with the western armies through Tennessee and Georgia.

Without doubt, it is highly desirable that some form of field railway should be adopted in our own service, and a sufficient amount should be constructed to at least form a nucleus. In the case of military operations, no form of transportation on land is so expeditious as that by rail. Various forms of road for field service are used by the Continental armies and it would certainly seem a proper step to provide for a similar means of service with our army. However, on the other hand, the matter of procuring the necessary railway material for promptly laying a light road of any required capacity would be a much shorter operation in the United States, with the great commercial industry of iron-making and railroad building carried on as it is to-day, than in most of the countries of the old world, where railway building is practically completed and any additions are confined to repairs and minor extensions of the existing lines.

To build a fixed railway into the immediate presence of active operations, the mobility of the army would be greatly reduced. The class of transportation that renders the army most mobile is wheel and pack transportation, and that will always be the ultimate means of placing supplies and equipage in the hands of the army, and an ample amount of such transportation should always be available to secure the required mobility.

When the army comes to depend upon the railway to such an extent that it will be tied to any one position, its mobility and, necessarily its efficiency will be correspondingly reduced.

At its conclusion, Colonel Baker was liberally applauded for his interesting paper and General Price expressed the high appreciation of the delegates, saying that the address was of great value to all interested in that important subject.

Colonel Logan said that a number of newspaper representatives had asked to be allowed to take a photograph of the assembly, for reproduction in the daily press. The delegates thereupon grouped themselves for the benefit of the photographers, a recess having been taken.

Quite a number of officers who are unable to attend the Camp of Instruction for the required period have suggested that it might be a good plan to have one class of instruction next year covering a period of three days, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, with an accompanying pay for attendance. It is contended that if this plan is adopted that it will result in an improved attendance. Under the circumstances, it is explained, many officers find it difficult to leave their work for a lengthier period. As there are considerable calls of duty every year, the plan suggested is well worth considering.

The recent appointments of Colonel Hutchins as Deputy Commissary General, Colonel Rausch as Deputy Quartermaster General and Lieutenant Colonel Samuel Davis Foster, formerly of the Eighteenth Infantry, are merited, as is also that of Major Whittaker to the Adjutant General's Department, and that of Major Charles C. Norris to the Judge Advocate General's Department. The promotion of Major John T. Duffy to succeed Colonel Rausch was admirable. Major Duffy is one of the best shots in the State and is a thorough National Guardsman.

Arrangements have been completed here for the dedication of Pennsylvania's memorial to her sons who fell in the series of fifty battles in the vicinity of Culpepper, Va., in the Civil War. A monument that is unique in design and in purpose has been constructed. The memorial was provided by the act of June 13, 1907, which authorized an appropriation of $8,000, and $2,500 has been provided for the dedicatory ceremonies, which will be held in October.

The time of the dedication will be fixed by the Governor and will be an elaborate affair.

The commission in charge of the work is composed of Colonel Samuel W. Hill, Bellevue, Allegheny county, chairman, who was an officer of the 155th Infantry; Frederick F. Rohm, Paterson, secretary, of the Sixteenth Cavalry, and Colonel Charles H. Worman, Philadelphia, of the Eighteenth Philadelphia Cavalry, treasurer.

The commission was able to secure a monument of Westerly granite thirty feet high and thirteen feet square at the base, surmounted by a ball of polished granite. The weight of the memorial is estimated at 175 tons, some of the boulders weighing as much as nineteen tons. The plinth at the top is five feet square. The stones of the memorial are set in soft brass.

The Hazleton Borough Police wear a similar uniform to the State Police Force, which is recognized as a very serviceable outfit. The similarity of uniforms, however, have got the people of this community guessing. Clothing the municipal police in this kind of uniform is decidedly a mistake, as it is lkely to have a tendency to detract from the dignity of the State Force.

A new ruling in the Loyal Legion admits members to the first class who may have held commissions during the Spanish-American War and who may have served only as enlisted men during the Civil War.

The movement to organize a Veteran Corps in the Third Infantry has not met with the prompt response which was anticipated, and it is likely that some efforts will be made to bring this important matter to a practical conclusion.

It is stated that the proposed trip of the Second Infantry to the Pacific Coast next year is not progressing very satisfactorily.

The roster for the last year shows that there were fewer changes in Colonel Hutchinson's Eighth Infantry than any other State unit.

NOTES

New blank forms have been adopted for making the field inspection reports of all militia organizations that participate in an encampment, practice march, or manoeuver campaign this year. Copies of these blank forms for infantry have already been sent to the Adjutant General of each State for distribution to each company and regimental commander. These copies will not be needed by the inspecting officer. A careful study of the blank forms will give much information of value to militia officers as a guide toward increasing the field efficiency of their organizations. Copies of the blank forms for cavalry, field artillery, coast artillery, engineers, signal troops, and sanitary troops will be sent out for similar distribution as soon as they are received from the Government printer.

Captain Edmund Dunn is one of the best known men in Connellsville, Fayette County, being prominently identified with its industrial and financial interest. Captain Dunn is the father of Captain Harry Dunn, who successfully reorganized and commanded Company D of the Tenth Infantry. Recently, at a personal expense of nearly $1,000, Captain Dunn, Sr., placed a tablet at Washington, Pennsylvania, as a memoriam of Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, on which is inscribed the full roster of the company with the dates of casualties and military data.

Major John H. Martin, Commissary of the Second Brigade, is preparing a paper which he expects to submit to Colonel Horace L. Haldeman, Commissary General, which relates to the difference of the garrison ration and that of the National Guard ration. He firmly believes that the full ration allowance (25 cents) should be expended and that the extra rations taken by some companies should be dispensed with and the men not charged with deductions from their camp pay which the State does not recognize.

Major Fowler, formerly of the Eighteenth Infantry, has in charge a piece of the steel armor with a projecting gun of the ill-fated U. S. S. Maine. This relic was presented by the United States Government to the United Spanish-American War Veterans, who propose having it superbly mounted with a bronze tablet attached, suitably inscribed. It is expected that this will be placed in one of the public parks in Allegheny, now known as North Side, Pittsburgh.

The Adjutant's office in the Eighteenth Regiment Armory is a model business affair. It would do credit to any large commercial house.

Company K, of the Fourteenth, stationed in the city of McKeesport, will in all probability soon be housed in excellent quarters. A change in this line is contemplated. The citizens of McKeesport are enthusiastic in their military company and entertain great hope of having another company of infantry organized in that place in the near future.

Captain Best, Lieutenants Thorne and Faucett, are experienced officers and know how to handle a successful military company.

It is stated that the executive committee of the Allentown Fair Association will shortly extend an invitation to Troop G to give an exhibition of fancy riding during the celebrated fair in September.

The march and bivouac of Battery C on May 11th and 12th in command of Captain Cox was an interesting experience and of great benefit. On this occasion the battery had a fine lot of horses who soon got accustomed to the artillery work. One hundred and ten men reported for this tour of duty.

Major Harry Fee, Tenth Infantry, of Indiana, Pennsylvania, whose commission will expire the latter part of June, will be a candidate for re-election. The company officers are very much attached to the Major, who has served the State and nation with fidelity. Major Fee in civil life is a prominent attorney of the Indiana county bar.

On May 24, twenty-seven company officers of the Tenth Infantry reported to Colonel Albert J. Logan at the Country Club, Greensburg, Pennsylvania, when an election was held for Colonel, Tenth Infantry, vice Coulter commission expired. Colonel Richard Coulter was unanimously re-elected. After the election Colonel Coulter entertained the officers at luncheon, at which time addresses were made by Colonels Logan, Coulter and Captain Powell.

The condition of Company G, stationed at Hollidaysburg, is reported as not very pleasing to the commander of the Tenth Infantry. The company will be required to take at least sixty men to camp and some suggested changes in the non-commissioned officers. The membership of this company is largely made up of young men residing in Altoona, which is but a few miles away. It will be remembered that only recently Colonel Coulter recommended the change of Company M from Altoona to Latrobe.

It is reported that Mr. J. B. Head, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Latrobe, who has taken a deep interest in National Guard matters, will offer a cash prize of $500 and sterling loving cups to the rifle team of Company M, of the Tenth, which will contest in the inter-company matches.

It is generally believed that the leading companies in the spring inspection of the Tenth Infantry will be I, C and M. The latter company showed up remarkably well on the night of the inspection and it was rather a surprise to Major McNary.

Lieutenant Frank Barber, Company B, Engineers, is confident that another Engineer Company can be successfully organized in Philadelphia, and it is believed that steps have already been taken to interest young men in Baldwin's Locomotive Works and at Brill's Car Works.

Allentown is justly proud of its newly appointed Brigadier General S. D. Lehr. General Lehr was one of the former Colonels of the Fourth Infantry and served with distinction during the Civil War.

Colonel Samuel Moody, formerly Commissary General, is reported as being quite ill, suffering from a nervous break-down.
